BIOGRAPHY

Alex has always had a passion for construction, holding various field and office positions growing up in Colorado. After graduating Colorado State University in 2010 with a bachelors in Economics, he moved to St. John in the U.S.V.I. to work as an installer in the solar energy industry. Once he returned home, Alex worked as an estimator for a small business enterprise, where he was responsible for accurately pricing scopes of work, reviewing and negotiating contracts with owners, general contractors, and suppliers, as well as ordering materials in accordance with project schedules. Alex worked on projects for CDOT, Colorado State Parks, public school districts, private entities, municipalities, and the federal government. The experience Alex gained working as a key member of a small project administration team allows him to quickly understand the problems facing clients in the construction industry and communicate his advice efficiently.

Alex's legal career has consisted of helping clients will all stages of dispute resolution, including through trial and arbitration. Additionally, Alex helps clients with real estate and development issues, including drafting and negotiating purchase and sales agreements, easements, leases, zoning, and performing due diligence.

In 2019, Alex obtained his law degree from the University of Denver, Sturm College of Law where he re-established the Construction Law Society, serving as President, and also served as Treasurer for the Student Trial Lawyers Association. He is admitted to practice law in Colorado.
